What makes a great Agile game?

What makes a great Agile game?

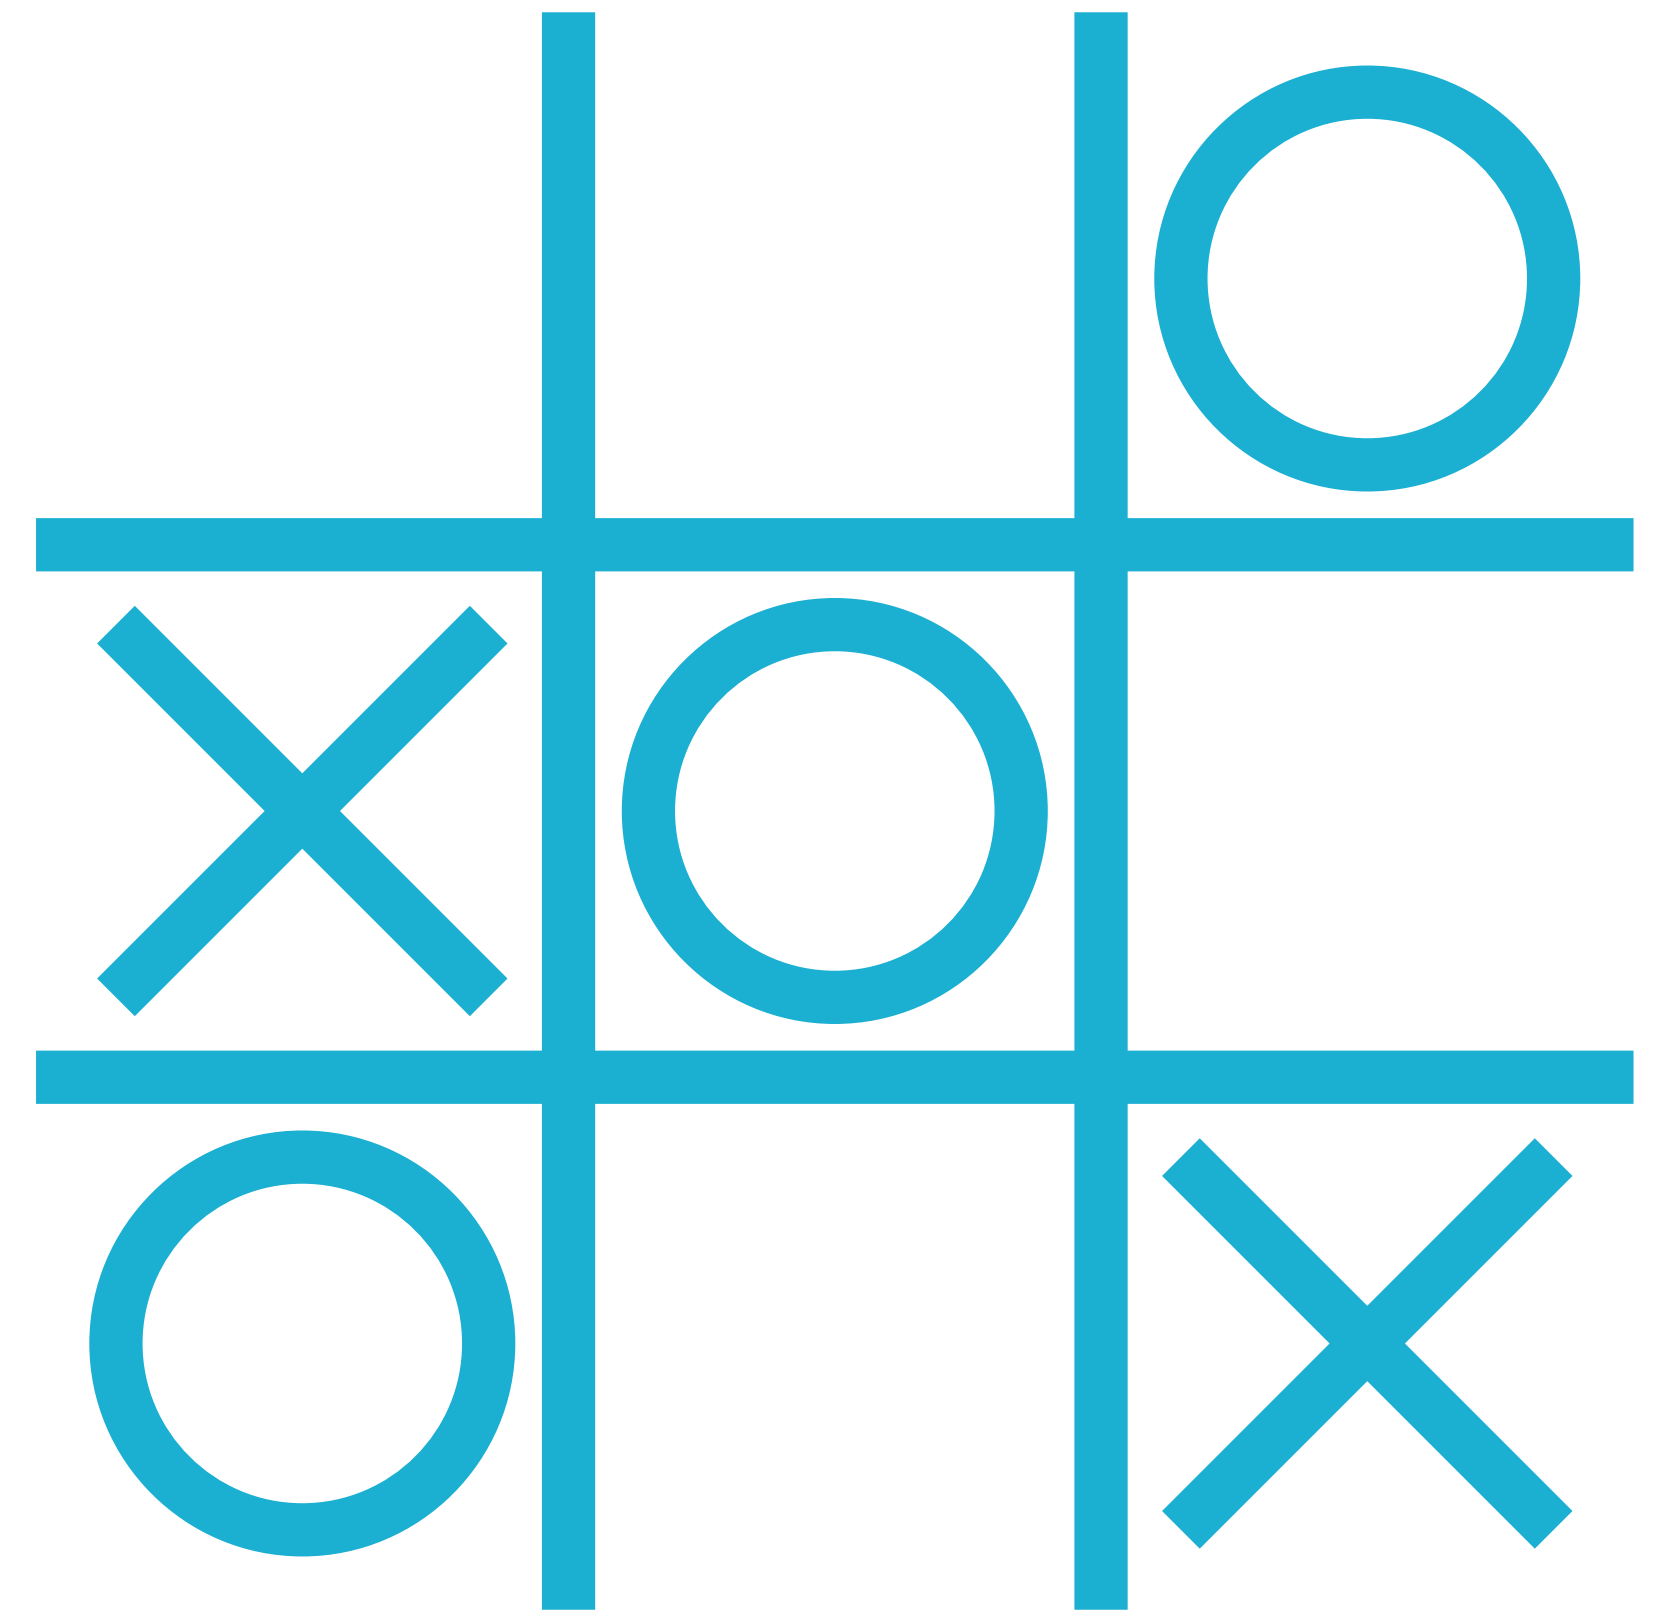

Agile Game

- A playful activity
- that teaches you something
- or helps you get some work done

Online Agile Games

- ✓ No new tools to learn (you can only learn one new thing at a time)
 - ✓ Simplest online tool that works (Google Doc?)
 - ✓ Simple tools from around the house (paper, pencil, poker cards, dice?)
- ✓ Don't exactly reproduce offline game
- ✓ Fun (positive vibe → brain is ready to learn)

Example: Online Ball Point Game

- ✓ A conversation with a friend
- ✓ Advice and play testing - thank you, Agile Games email list community
- ✓ Trello as “simplest online tool that works”
- ✓ Failure? Trello too hard? Wrong lessons learned?
- ✓ kspr.co/onlineballpoint

Online Point Game

“It’s like the Ball Point Game, but 100% online”

Introduction

The Ball Point Game is awesome. I use it every time I introduce Agile to a new group of people. It’s an experiential activity that facilitates their teaching themselves many fundamentals of Agile product development and empirical process control.

But it’s a face-to-face activity with physical props. It only works in a physical classroom.

The Online Point Game an Agile teaching game that delivers the benefits of the Ball Point Game, but it is 100% online. I’ve used it successfully in my live online courses.

Facilitator notes

- Copy this Google Sheet

Logistics

- Zoom - our venue
 - You’ll be connected together just like you are right now, using audio and video over Zoom.
 - In addition, you’ll have a Trello board and a Google spreadsheet.
- Trello - your game board
 - We’ll play this game using Trello as the shared online game board.
 - First, you need a Trello account. If you don’t already have one, create one now.
